What is enclosure?

Enclosure, or inclosure, is an English legal process of enclosing either open fields; common land or waste land and restricting use of that land to a specific owner. The historic tradition of common land and the open-field system of agriculture, was ended in many areas by these acts of enclosure.

The enclosure of land took place in different areas at different times, from the medieval period onwards. Early enclosures were done by private agreement, but as this was often difficult to achieve, it was latterly done by private acts of Parliament. The General Enclosure Acts of 1801; 1836 and 1845, made the process of enclosure much easier, so many enclosures date from after this period.

What are enclosure records?

The records produced by the enclosure process, include either an agreement or an act of Parliament; an award and often a plan of the area. The awards are legal documents which show the redistribution of the land being enclosed, giving information about land owners; roads; rights of way; boundaries etc. Also there may be associated paperwork; drafts; legal disputes; amendments etc. This list shows the main records of agreements or acts; awards and plans which are held by the West Yorkshire Archive Service. For other enclosure documents please see our online catalogue: www.catalogue.wyjs.org.uk/calmview/

Not all areas were enclosed, some kept their common land and/or existing field structure, so not every place in the West Riding of Yorkshire is listed here. Other record offices may also hold West Riding of Yorkshire enclosure records, so searching the National Archives catalogue to find these is recommended: discovery.nationalarchives.gov.uk/

Some enclosure records relating to other counties are also kept by West Yorkshire Archive Service, so these are included in this guide, denoted by their county code.

Why are enclosure records useful?

Enclosure plans are very important because, like tithe maps, they are often one of the first large scale maps of a particular area. The awards give a detailed inventory of land-ownership at the time of the enclosure. Their use for both local history and family history is considerable, plus the acts; awards and plans can still have legal relevance even today.
